2026 TRAVEL TRAILERS

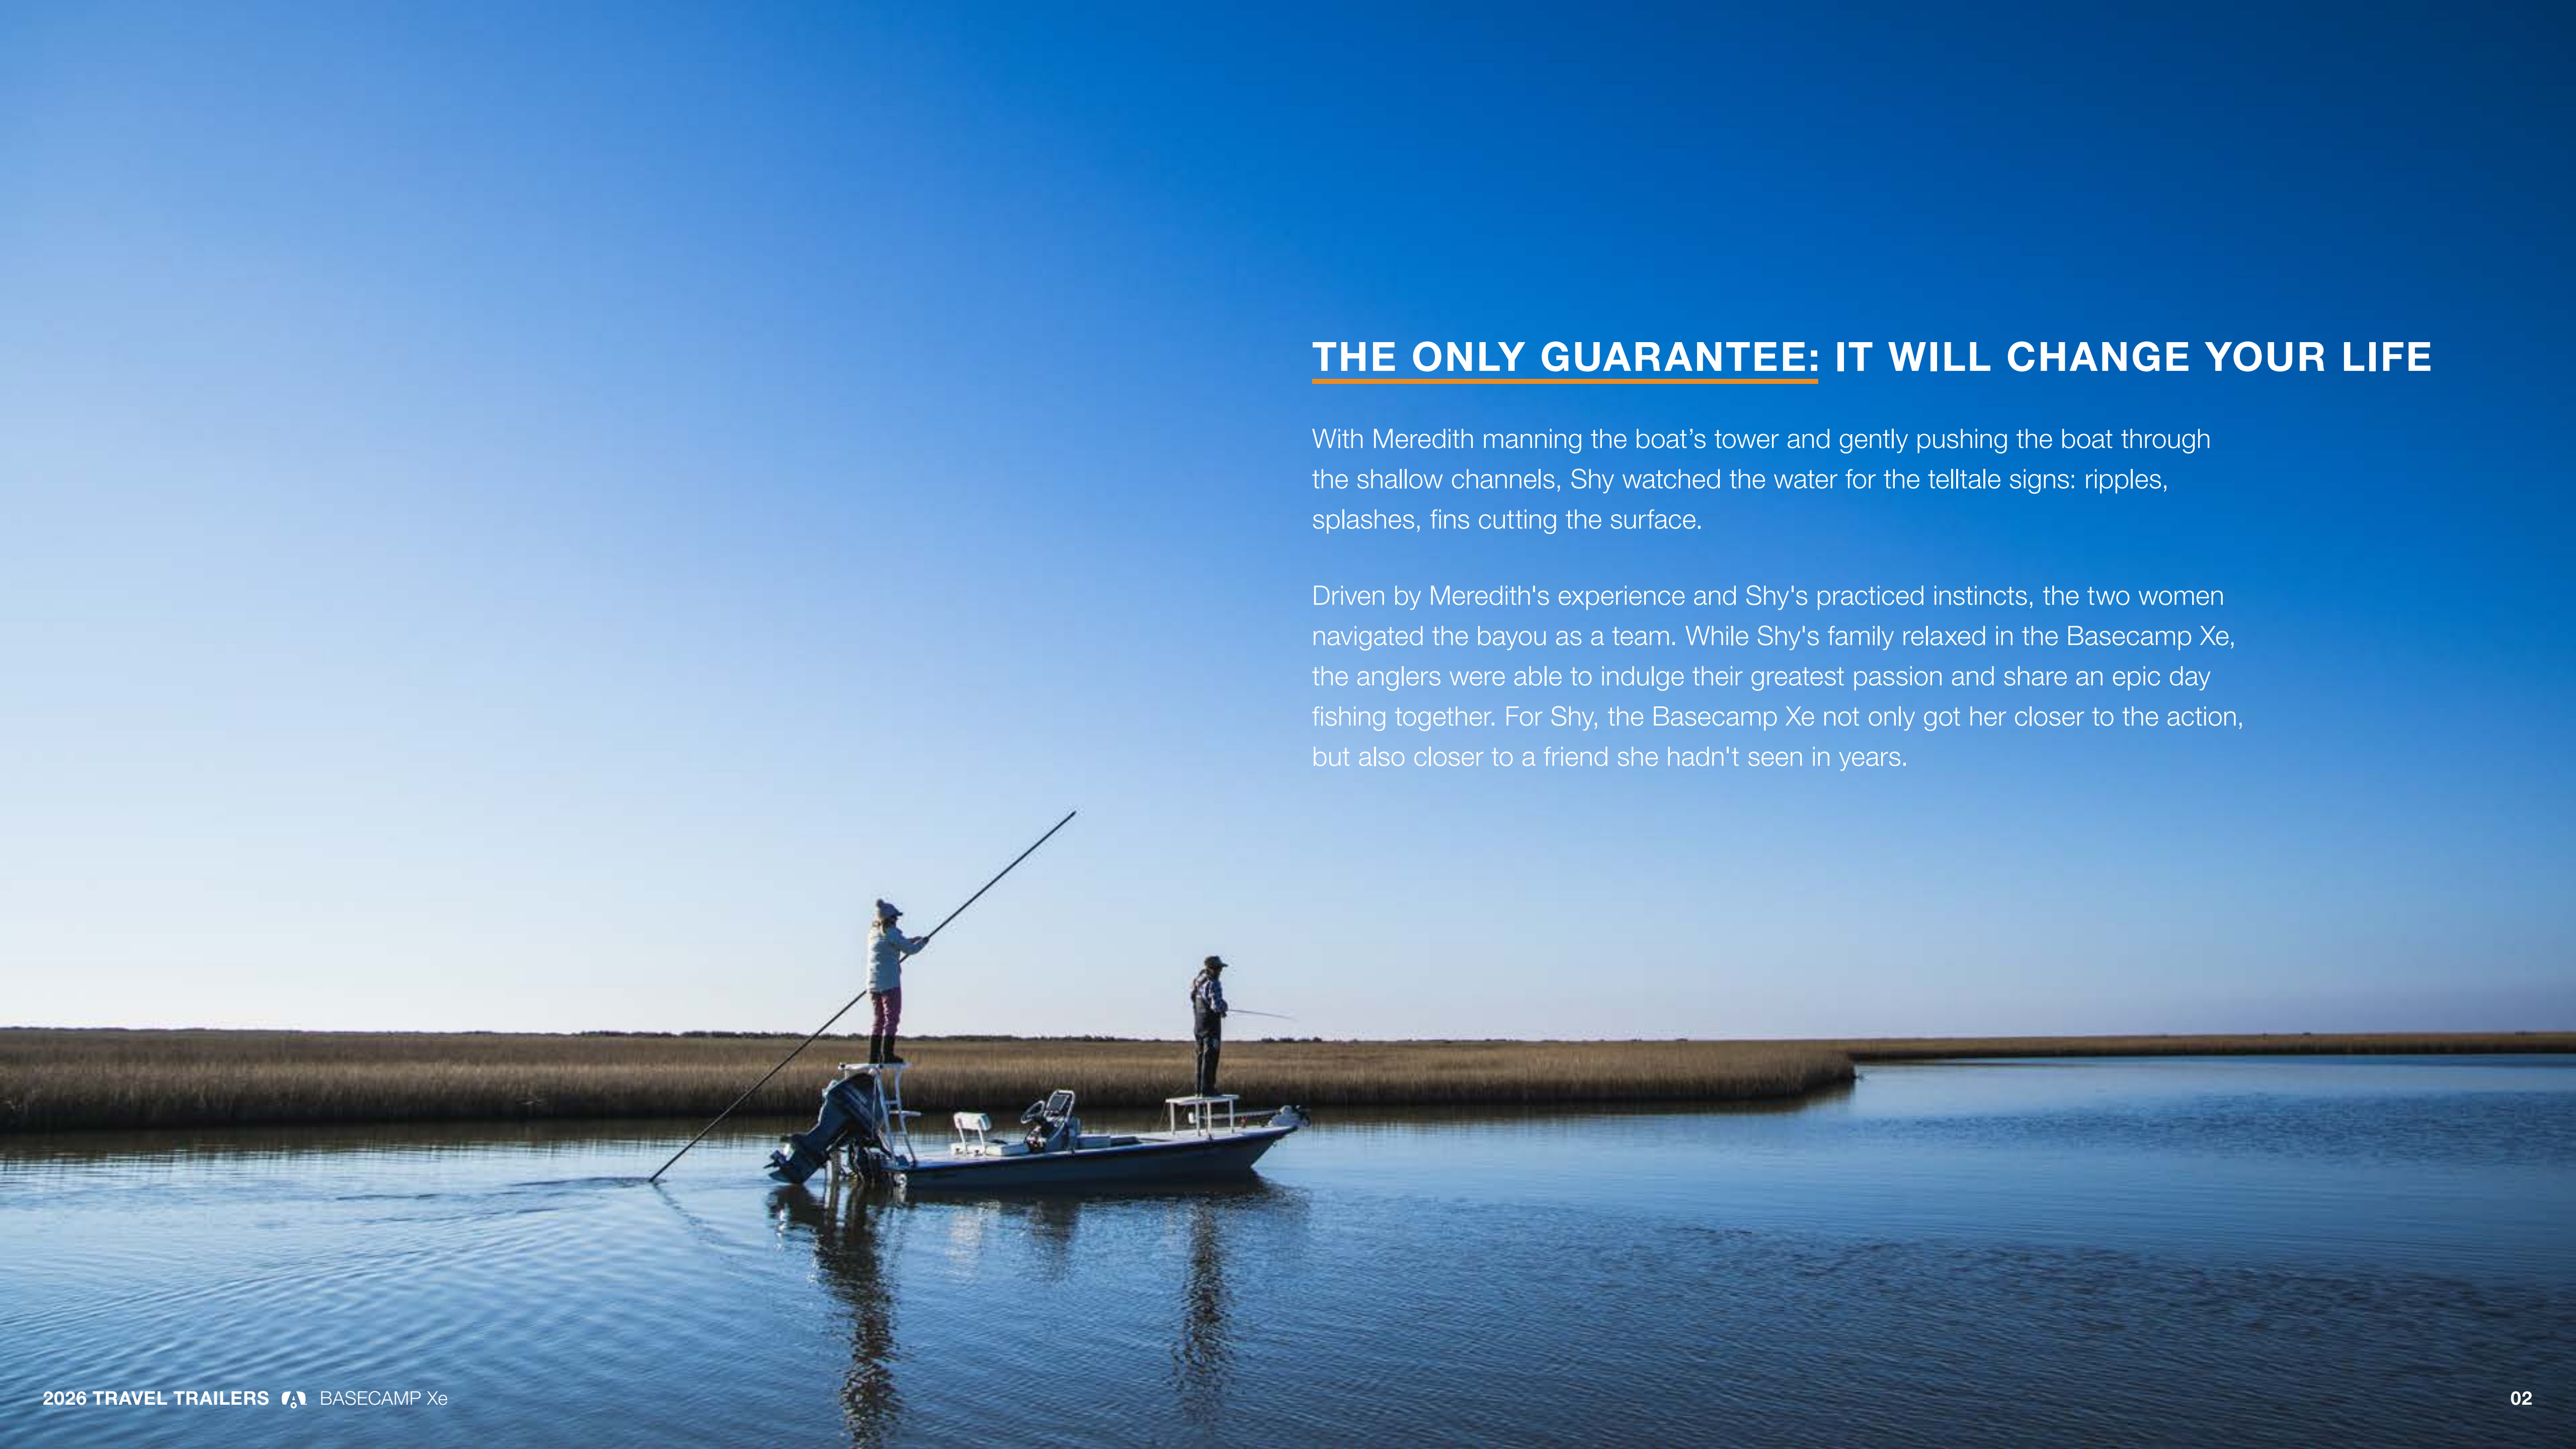

SHYANNE ORVIS - Fly Fishing Angler

As Close to the Adventure as You Can Get

Basecamp Xe is the newest addition to Airstream's most adventurous travel trailer lineup and delivers more travel freedom than ever before. Equipped with a massive battery bank, 600W of rooftop solar, and a 3,000W inverter, Basecamp Xe is an electric-first travel trailer that's ready for adventures of all sizes.

For fly fishing angler Shyanne Orvis, the adventure took her deep into the Louisiana bayou with dreams of catching a bucket list fish. Camping in a Basecamp Xe on the property of her friend and mentor, Meredith McCord, Shy set her sights on the bull redfish that make their way into the bayou's shallow waters in mid-winter to feast on plentiful shrimp. But while catching fish was on both of their minds, the journey – like any Airstream trip – was about more than simply the adventure at hand.

For years, Shy had dreamed of making the trip to southern Louisiana and fishing with Meredith – one of the most experienced anglers in the country, with numerous records to her name. Together, they ventured out into the seemingly endless expanse of marsh reeds, sandwiched by a dome of blue sky above and the winding water pathways they navigated.

A small white fishing boat with two people on a calm body of water with reeds in the background. The boat is positioned in the lower center of the frame. One person is standing at the stern, holding a long pole, and the other is standing at the bow, also holding a pole. The water is still, reflecting the sky and the boat. The background consists of a line of reeds and a clear blue sky.

THE ONLY GUARANTEE: IT WILL CHANGE YOUR LIFE

With Meredith manning the boat's tower and gently pushing the boat through the shallow channels, Shy watched the water for the telltale signs: ripples, splashes, fins cutting the surface.

Driven by Meredith's experience and Shy's practiced instincts, the two women navigated the bayou as a team. While Shy's family relaxed in the Basecamp Xe, the anglers were able to indulge their greatest passion and share an epic day fishing together. For Shy, the Basecamp Xe not only got her closer to the action, but also closer to a friend she hadn't seen in years.

They spotted a redfish and Shy's eyes narrowed behind the lenses of her sunglasses. Her body tensed first before relaxing as her hands began to work the line. Meredith's quiet wisdom rang in her ears as the hunt began: Shy's left hand pulling out slack on the line, her right snapping backward, the pole flexing, her wrist hitting marks at ten and two, the rhythm loose and practiced after years on the water. Shy sent the rod swinging through the blue sky like a conductor's baton.

The eyes of the shrimplike fly bulged as it sailed through the air, feathers ruffling before it hit the water. Too short. More pulling at the line, reeling it back in and casting again.

“This is fishing by sight,” Meredith explains. “You’re watching for the fish as they move, and you’re really targeting them right off the bow.”

And then the fly landed a foot off the bull redfish's broad snout. The fish turned, casting an eye toward what looked exactly like its favorite food. In one gulping motion it bit and Shy hooked it instantly. The fish darted, bending the end of the fly rod into a crescent and sending both women into motion, electrified with excitement for this rare moment between fisher and fish.

“It’s great catching fish,” said Shy of the experience with Meredith out on the bayou. “But to do it with a friend – to come down here and visit her and see this beautiful place – that’s what makes it all worth it.”

Moments later it was over. A few photos, big smiles, and a tender goodbye as Shy released the redfish back into its waters.

Comfortable, Private, and Close to the Action

After docking the boat, Shy and Meredith made the short drive home. There, Shy met back up with her family at the Basecamp Xe parked just a short walk from the house. With an onboard wet bath, galley with sink and stovetop, and plenty of sleeping space for the whole family, Shy found adventure, comfort, and friendship in equal parts – no guest room required.

Made for Adventure

Basecamp Xe delivers powerful features that get you closer than ever to the action. A rear door provides easy access. Integrated wet storage doubles as a cooler. And ample storage in overhead lockers and cabinetry (as well as inside the hitch-mounted propane shroud) lets you bring along all the gear your adventure requires.
